Tips for better communication with someone with dementia.

Being aware of how you talk, listen, and behave will help you to have positive interactions with someone living with dementia.

Things to do:

- Start with a positive interaction
- Speak with care
- Listen attentively

Testimony from Barry Mouson

Our Mom now 93 has been at Community Care Cottages for about 18 months. From my perspective, I cannot say enough good things about the attention and care she receives at Willow Cottage. It feels like all of the care workers enjoy what they do, I am sure it must be very challenging, difficult work at times but they all seem very pleasant, always smiling, laughing, and having fun with the residents and the visitors.

They also make me feel welcome anytime I come to visit. I feel so much at ease when I bring Mom back home from an outing. She has advanced dementia and some days does not recognize the house but she is always immediately greeted with a huge smile and made to feel very welcome and respected. I am so happy we stumbled upon and chose Community Care Cottages.
